Without further ado, here are eight ordinary people with extraordinary stories: 1. A photographer saves his friend from slavery. A man named Ben Randall, an Australian photographer, went to Vietnam many years ago and photographed 100 people. In 2011, a friend Randall met while there was reported missing. To find her and raise awareness for human trafficking, he tracked down the 100 locals heâ€™d photographed five years before and learned more about their lives. He met with 80 of them and wrote about his travels online. He started The Human, Earth Project as a means to inform people of the horrors M. would have faced. The story doesnâ€™t end there, though: just last year, Randall located M. and M.â€™s friend P. â€“ and rescued them both.
