“This read-along book makes me happier than a bedbug in mattress factory.” — Keith Knight, Creator of (th)ink, the Knight Life

“This is a Chicken Soup for the Soul for people who never moved out of their parent’s house. Bobby Joe Ebola does for American popular music what a creepy uncle does for a family at dinner: everyone tries to pay them no mind while feeling a little uncomfortable and trying not to soul-search the darkest part of themselves.” — Cassie J. Schneider, author of Fine Fine Music and 2012 Sister Spit tour performer

A boutique multi media project that record and comics aficionados will find entertaining—from hyper-detailed illustrations by artist Jason Chandler which offer new laughs upon multiple viewings.

Dan Abbott and Corbett Redford grew up in the suburban wasteland of Pinole, CA (or haven’t grown up at all, depending on who you ask) and became intimately familiar with strip-mall food service jobs there. Since 1995 they have been making music and trouble as the satiric folk-rock duo Bobby Joe Ebola and the Children MacNuggits, which has ruined otherwise pleasant evenings for thousands of unsuspecting concertgoers. The band tours the world often and has possibly become a little too used to the smell of one another. Their newest record, Trainwreck To Narnia, is available through Rooftop Comedy Productions. The two somehow manage to afford to live in the San Francisco Bay Area.

Jason Chandler isn’t a bad guy, he just draws that way. He’s designed all of the records and merchandise for his own band The Frustrators. He’s designed skateboards for Nobyl. He’s designed books for Keith Knight. He works in a cold bunker in San Francisco. Immature adults and unsupervised children can visit him at facebook.com/HorribleComics. And he’s quite pleased to be working with Bobby Joe Ebola these days (this is his first book ever - hi mom!).
