Modern English refers to the English language since about 1450 or 1500. Also see: The Earliest English Dictionaries.

The Normative Tradition

"From its very early days, the Royal Society concerned itself with matters of language, setting up a committee in 1664 whose principal aim was to encourage the members of the Royal Society to use appropriate and correct language. This committee, however, was not to meet more than a couple of times. Subsequently, writers such as John Dryden, Daniel Defoe, and Joseph Addison, as well as Thomas Sheridan's godfather, Jonathan Swift, were each in turn to call for an English Academy to concern itself with language--and in particular to constrain what they perceived--Some modern linguists define linguistic field research as follows:

Linguistic field research or fieldwork is the collection of linguistic data outside of a laboratory, library or workplace setting, and it is also the process of observing systematically the informants in the chosen survey locations and studying the linguistic data from the observation. The approaches and methods used in field research vary across disciplines with sociology, sociopsychology, anthropology, dialectology, economics, etc. for instance. However, some world linguists believe that it is a mixture of Western modern anthropology and linguistics, and it was translated into Chinese in the 1920s. Modern English Lexicology aims at giving a systematic description of the word-stock of Modern English. Words, their component parts—morphemes and various types of word-groups, are subjected to structural and semantic analysis primarily from the synchronic angle. It has now become a tradition to include in a Course of Lexicology: 1 The symbol ( ) stands for the so-called zero-inflection, i.e. the significant absence of an inflectional affix. Modern English Lexicology as a subject of study forms part of the Theoretical Course of Modern English and as such is inseparable from its other component parts, i.e. Grammar, Phonetics, Stylistics, on the one hand, and the Course of History of the English Language, on the other.
